

NO EXPORT COAL IN ALASKA

TIEUP OF THE FIELDS DUE TO COOLISH EXAGGERATION.

Copper and Iron Production Slips. However, the Secretary of the Interior, Walter Fisher, has personally examined the situation and to meet and talk with as many of those interested as he could reach.

The Secretary found the people of Alaska everywhere interested in his visit and eager to talk with him. His directness both of question and answer impressed the Alaskans who met him with the sincerity of his purpose at all times. Mr. Fisher asked for cooperation and tolerance. He told the people that he had found the situation as it is on coming into office, that he was putting forth his best efforts to solve the problems and that his action must be necessary purely advisory, as relief after all lies with Congress.

In the party which visited the Bering River coal fields were the Secretary, Gov. Clark, Albert H. Brooks of the geological survey, Dr. J. A. Holmes, director of the United States bureau of mines; Sumner S. Smith, mine inspector for Alaska; G. R. Gove, private secretary to Mr. Fisher; Walter T. Fisher, the secretary's son; Tom Gorham, a friend of young Fisher; Andrew Christensen, chief of the field division; and Myron Hubbard, mineral land surveyor in charge of the work in the Bering field.

The Bering River coal fields were not found up to expectations and Mr. Fisher was forced to feel that the exaggeration of values there was a handicap to action, for the region has been misrepresented by the men who sought to get possession of it and by the magazines and other publications which have attempted to describe it.

Such coal as is there—and there are many evidences of large deposits—will not drive either Washington or British Columbia coal out of Washington or British Columbia markets or reduce the price of any fuel now finding a market in the Puget Sound region or elsewhere. Controller Bay is not a harbor, nor is it the key to anything except a huge ice field and a marsh which is valuable only for breeding places for wild waterfowl. There is not one foot of land in the territory owned by the United States, nor is there a single acre of land in the territory owned by the United States, nor is there a single acre of land in the territory owned by the United States.

The deep water area is merely a channel which is neither definite nor permanent. Bering River carries a large quantity of silt, and the smaller streams coming into the Bering River carry a large quantity of silt. The movement of this silt causes the channel to shift so much that no geologic survey charts made at any considerable intervals would be alike. Then there are the ice and the winds. The amount of fresh water in Controller Bay causes freezing of the surface every winter. This ice moves with every tide and the movement is so strong that mile long trestle structures would inevitably be destroyed. To build a road from Controller Bay would mean to lay tracks over a wide area of marsh underlain with silt and over the bars and flats of the intricate and shifting delta of the Bering River.

No development has been done which would permit placing a valuation on the field or on any part of it. On the other hand, the land is being sold for less than 3,000 feet in the aggregate for the entire district—and the surface exposures, or outcrops, present a physical condition that would make it impossible even for local purposes and decidedly against the belief that coal can be produced which will stand shipping. The bituminous has excellent cooking qualities and its igneous does not injure it in the least for that purpose.

These conditions restrict the product of the Bering River field to Alaska consumption and, accordingly, the mining of coal to a few small pits, the product of which can be distributed. Oil is rapidly taking the place of the coal Alaska should be mining for its own consumption. The coal of the Bering River field would have to be landed at Cordova, Valdez and Seward at a cost of $5.50 a ton, as $7.00 worth of oil there is equal to a ton of coal. The Bering River coal field will be able to compete with oil under present conditions, that is, considering the interest and the expense of mining and the cost of a line of railroads to the coal fields and the heavy investments already made.
